

NSF ADVANCE at the University of Michigan
Faculty Career Advising

Career advising takes many different forms and evolves over time. Career advising involves, at a minimum, the exchange of information and perspectives between more and less experienced people who share a role or interest. It may take place in a formal way in your department. The ADVANCE program seeks only to supplement any such formal advising efforts that are already underway.

We are interested in creating opportunities for less experienced women scientists to have an initial conversation with more experienced scientists (women and men) that might or might not lead to a longer-term advising relationship. That conversation (and potential relationship) might involve discussion of general career issues, or it might focus on a particular area or domain. Some women scientists may aim to develop relationships with more than one career advisor regarding different areas of their professional life, such as work and family, or publication strategies, or lab management, or grant writing.

To that end, we ask that you complete the following:

Department: _____
